Lo Manthang folk concerned over world heritage site plan

POST REPORT
KATHMANDU, NOV 3

Local people at Lo Manthang, an ancient mountain kingdom, are concerned over the existence of their homeland once the area is enlisted as a World Culture Heritage site.

In 2008, the government had included Lo Manthang, an ancient mountain kingdom, as a World Culture Heritage site. The famous earthen-walled capital located at an altitude of around 3,000 meters above sea level, in the tentative list for World Culture Heritage designation by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation. The famous Tibetan Buddhist kingdom is the single nomination from the country for the designation for its uniqueness and vibrant cultural heritage dating from the 15th century.

Indra Dhara Bista, a local and a member of Culture Heritage Conservation Sub-Committee, strongly objected to the proposal saying it would affect the livelihood of local communities who are dependent on Lo Manthang and surrounding cultural landscape.

Local people believe that once the site is declared a world heritage site, the authorities concerned would curtail their access to the place and restrict other permitted development works necessary for improving their livelihood. A large number of local people depend on trade and agriculture for their livelihood, and run shops connected with the earthen-walled surrounding of Lo Manthang. Bista was among the participants attending a two-day international symposium on 'Safeguarding Lo Manthang and Cultural Landscape of Upper Mustang' in the Capital that concluded on Saturday.

In the programme, Tashi Bista, a youth advisor representing the Upper Mustang Youth Society, said it is worse to hear news about antiques of Upper Mustang efforts of artifacts in the area," he said.

Meanwhile, the locals have submitted a letter mentioning their concerns to the Jigme Shinge Palbar Bista, former king of Lo Manthang for consideration.

Since 2008, various organizations and experts have been involved in restoration temples, research and excavation of prehistoric caves in the area. Roland Lin Chih-Hung, a representative from the UNESCO World Heritage Centre in France, said it is not possible to work in isolation, without consulting the communities for the sustainable development of the particular site. "Regarding the decision about listing as a world heritage site, it is still a long way to go and local people's concerns would be taken into consideration during the process," he added.

According to Neel Kamal Chappagain, assistant professor at the Centre for Heritage Management of Ahmedabad University in India, sustainable development of the site is possible only through a mutual dialogue between the locals and the conservationists," he said.

NA's health camp benefits Palpa villagers

MAHAVARVAL
PALPA, NOV 3

A free health camp organised by the Nepal Army's Chandri Prasad Battalion at Jhokendi of Foksingkot VDC in the district has benefited 104 people in the area.

According to Jitendra Thapa, the battalion chief, the camp was organised as part of the Army's social responsibility initiative after they found out that there were many people with genuine need of proper check-up and treatment in the area.

Dr Khadka said she was suffering from gastritis and high blood pressure. According to Gharti, this was the first time that had ever visited a doctor. "Let's see if the medicine given to me does any good," she said, adding that she would be happy to be relieved of her illness.

Bhawisara Saru Magar, another local who came to the health camp, said many villagers opt to go hospital only as the last resort.

Senior leaders of the CPN-UML are also busy in their own constituencies. Besides Khanal, senior leader Madhav Kumar Nepal is busy in his two constituencies (Rautahat and Kathmandu-2). Khanal won the 2008 election with a low margin, while Nepal had tasted defeat in both his constituencies.

"As per our party's tradition, senior leaders' nationwide district campaign comes last," said CPN-UML secretary Shankar Pokhrel. But as the indefinite general strike called by the CPN-Maoist

Flower prices up due to 'short supply'

POST REPORT
KATHMANDU, NOV 3

Though there were relatively fewer vehicles plying on the road on Sunday afternoon, the Laxmi Puja day, pavements were bustling with pedestrians purchasing goods for the Tihar festival.

People seemed busy at flower shop in a corner of Chabahil Chowk, fiddling with the marigold flowers and bargaining with the vendor. "These are local flowers, not imported ones. Have a look," Chandras Babu Karki, a vendor, tried to convince his buyers. "Rs 100 is too much. I will pay Rs 80," said Laxmi Gurung, who hails from Baglung. According to vendors there, a single marigold flower costs Rs 20 while a fresh garland costs as much as Rs 150. "There has been short supply of flowers as we did not import from India," said Loknath Gaire, president of the Floriculture Association of Nepal.
